RELEASED PRISONER IS ON THE WAY TO JAPAN

Served Seventeen Years for Train Wrecking; Was Paroled and Is Now on the High Seas.

San Francisco, Dec. 10.—After serving seventeen years at Folsom prison for complicity in a fatal train-wrecking job perpetrated near Sacramento during the A. R. U. troubles of 1894, Samuel D. Worden, who was convicted of murder for the part he played in the tragic affair, and who escaped the noose only through the intercession of former President Grover Cleveland, has been paroled by the state board of prison directors, and now, bowed by the weight of more than three score years, is on his way to Japan to join a younger brother who has promised to take care of him for the remaining years of his life.

In the crime for which Worden was convicted five men lost their lives, and a few weeks later charges of murder were filed against six defendants, all of whom either were members or sympathizers of the American Railway union in its fight against the Southern Pacific company. After a sensational trial at Woodland, in Yolo county, which lasted several weeks, Worden alone was convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

Worden came of a good family in New York, and in his earlier days had known Grover Cleveland well. At the time of the train wrecking incident Cleveland was president, and interceded with then Governor Budd to prevent the infliction of the death penalty on Worden. He was successful, and the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment.

Parole Pardon Granted.
Negotiations looking toward securing a parole for Worden were begun more than two years ago, and his case probably has occupied more time and attention at the hands of the board of prison directors than any other applicant for similar relief. Ex-Senator Cole of Los Angeles, who knew the accused man's family, was an ardent worker in his behalf, and a number of other well known people interceded for him.

It was pleaded that he was not really the moving spirit in the train-wrecking episode and that his nature was more erratic than vicious. During his long period of incarceration at Folsom, he had been an exemplary prisoner, and without exception the officers and guards of the institution spoke highly of him, and recommended his parole. He was, when he was 63 years of age, which is 63 years, was also in his favor. The prison directors finally agreed on his application, and the order of parole was signed November 28 last.

Prior to this, however, considerable correspondence had passed between the board and the American consul at Japan, where Worden has a brother who is anxious to care for him. It was found that this brother is a physician of high standing in the Oriental empire, and the board concluded the aged convict would be in good hands for the remainder of his days. He will, however, observe the rule for all paroled prisoners and report regularly each month to the prison directors. The provision in the parole which permits the prisoner to leave the state is one within the discretion of the directors, but is exercised only on rare occasions.

Five Were Killed.
The train wreck which resulted in Worden's conviction took place on July 13, 1894, at a time when the great railroad strike was being prosecuted with much bitterness. A train drawing two Pullman cars and carrying a strong guard of United States soldiers was dethroned from a trestle a few miles out of Sacramento. The engineer and four soldiers were killed and several others injured.

It was found that a rail on the trestle had been loosened and a portion of the wooden superstructure below cut and so weakened that the train would be sure to fall through. Worden had employed a team from a Sacramento livery stable on the morning of the wreck and, in company with several other men, had been driven by a stable boy to a spot near the bridge. The authorities quickly found other conclusive evidence against him and he was taken in custody on the evening of the wreck.

Worden's parents were married by Grover Cleveland's father, a clergyman in Fayetteville, N. Y., in 1843, where Worden was born a year later. His mother came to Fayetteville from Massachusetts and boarded with an aunt of President Cleveland. His father was a practicing physician in central New York for many years. In Syracuse he was mayor, supervisor, member of the assembly and state senator, and closely associated with Hancock and McCarthy, prominent Republicans and abolitionists.

An Old Railroad Man.
Worden claims relationship with Worden of Monitor fame, who distinguished himself in the fight with the Merrimack at Hampton Roads. His uncle, General Thayer, had charge of the construction of Fort Warren, in Boston harbor, and founded Thayer college at South Halmstead, Mass., donating $500,000 to the institution.

S. D. Worden was graduated from the high school in Syracuse and spent two years at Union college, Schenectady. From 1864 to 1865 he was money clerk and express messenger for the American Express company on the New York Central. He came to California in 1865 with E. C. Felt, first division superintendent at Sacramento of the Central Pacific, and was employed as express messenger on the front by Wells, Fargo & Co. until the completion of the road, and then served as messenger on the road from Sacramento to San Francisco until 1870, when he went east.

In 1880 he had charge of the construction of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh road, and also served as superintendent of construction on several narrow gauge roads in Pennsylvania. In 1882 Worden returned to this coast and worked for the Southern Pacific as brakeman and conductor.

GEORGE GOULD BUYS GENUINE CASTLE

American Millionaire Has Purchased Himself a Fine Estate in Scotland and Will Drop All Business Cares.

London, Dec. 10.—George J. Gould has bought Castle Menzies, near Perthshire, Scotland, a beautiful country place with several thousand acres of woodlands. The American millionaire, father-in-law of Lord Deedes, intends to establish himself in dual state, like that of Andrew Carnegie, the lord of Skibo.

When the facts of the purchase became known it was related that Mr. Gould would retain his permanent home in America, but that he intended to spend several months of each year, surrounded by his family, at the Highland place. It is said the arrangements for obtaining this estate were carried on through Lord Deedes. Those intimately associated with Mr. Gould in recent months frequently have expressed the belief that he was preparing to retire from all active business life.
